L. A. Callahan of Salem, well known here, has a large poster which announced the celebration of the Fourth of July was back in 1868, which was held jointly by Leetonia and Washingtonville in the old Cherry Valley grove, midway between the two towns.

The poster is the property of Mr. Callahan's father, Abner Callahan, now living in California, but who was a native of Washingtonville and for many years a prominent citizen of that place. The day's program opened with a salute of 19 guns at sunrise.

At 10 a. m. the Declaration of Independence was read by Reuben Sheets after which M. L. Garfield delivered the oration. Then a free dinner to the crowd followed. At 2 o'clock a regular old-time bull fight was staged in the field nearby, the conflict being waged between two large animals that were specially trained for the sport.

A walking match followed this exhibition, the course lying between the two towns. At 3:30 a "mammoth" balloon ascension was made by "Captain Greenawalt," the daring aeronaut, who was to follow a mule race for a purse of $24, the last mule to win the prize. In the evening a gorgeous display of fireworks was to take place in Washingtonville. The rest of the night was to be taken up in dancing, music being furnished by "The Great Western Band."

The poster was signed by "Committee of Arrangements," of which Abner Callahan was chairman. The poster is well preserved and well printed, and contains a large cut of the American eagle.
